

Streets are for the birds.

Youth at risk often run away from parents and caregivers. Most come home a day or so later but some never return. Child and Youth Care workers don't ever want to give up on a young person and strive to create a place of acceptance and belonging for them. Child and Youth Care workers struggle often to maintain a placement in care. They know, first hand, the tragedy of losing a youth to the harm of the streets. They are also employed across a range of services with the mission to bring youth and young adults in from the cold.

CYCCanada.ca

Garth Goodwin for the Council of Canadian Child and Youth Care Associations